CAB Hosts its 4th Annual Poker Tournament

By Amanda White
STAFF WRITER

The Campus Activity Board (CAB) hosted its fourth annual poker tournament April 3. CAB holds the poker tournament every April to raise money for charity. This year, the proceeds will go to The House of Tiny Treasures, a school for homeless youth. In addition to raising money for charity, the poker tournament is also a way for students, faculty, and the community to get together and have fun.

At this year’s tournament, only individual poker games were held, including a learner’s table for inexperienced players. CAB’s Vice President Alex Mejia reports, “In past tournaments, there were other games to play besides poker including blackjack, roulette, and Texas Hold ‘Em.” In addition to poker games, there was plenty of good food such as pizza and popcorn, great music, and a prize table that included prizes such as golfing equipment and luggage.

CAB’s President Nicholas Martinez and Vice President Alex Mejia were also present playing a game of poker, and greeting guests as they walked through the door. 2006 UHD graduate Ubaldo Rodriguez was also present playing poker. Rodriguez is the one who initially came up with the idea to host a poker tournament back in 2006.

“I enjoy playing poker with my friends and I thought a poker game would be a good fundraising idea,” Rodriguez said. “I think the poker tournament is also a way for the Houston community to get to know UHD, and help the school build a name for itself. When I first discussed my idea with UHD, I had to clear up issues of gambling before the university would allow passage of the tournaments.”

The only money that anyone would have to pay at the tournament was the $10 entrance fee.

If you missed the poker tournament this year, you’ll have a chance to go next April. You can look for flyers around campus or logon to CAB’s web site at http://www.uhd.edu/cab to find out the exact date and location. While you wait for the tournament to roll around again, you can go to CAB’s web site or to the Student Activities and Events web site (SAE) http://www.uhd.edu/sae to look for more campus events.

Career Services Holds Careers and Coffee Mixers

By Christina Sheets
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

More than sixty organizations from around Texas participated in a week long career series to provide job opportunities in a professional environment for University of Houston-Downtown students. The companies catered to dozens of majors by offering degree and internship positions.

March 30th was the beginning of the event and focused on Business Analytical majors overall. April 6th through April 8th serviced Science and Technology, Business-Relationship based, and Public Service careers.

Resume and interview workshops were available for all students before, during, and after the week of the function in order to better prepare them. Sessions for each workshop ranged from forty-five minutes to an hour and were designed to help students create and edit a resume, learn how to dress and speak in an interview, as well as what to bring to the career series itself.

Round tables draped with black cloths were set around the Special Events Room for each organization and name tags were given to each student. Red, blue, and yellow colored nametags were used to designate the graduation date of each student before and after 2010. Coffee, finger foods, and other beverages were provided for everyone attending. Each career day lasted from 3 to 5 PM, though it was not necessary to stay the full two hours. Resumes of each student were sent out to the organizations during the week; however, many

Name Change Meetings Bring Heavy Opinions from Stakeholders

By Wilbert Chinchilla

Before further meetings on Thursday, April 15th, President Dr. William V. Flores had phone calls with a member of the UH Board of Regents and a legislator, came to UHD for a series of meetings and met with the Houston Chronicle Editorial Board to eventually arrive at the name change meeting with the Chancellor of the UH System, Dr. Welcome Wilson after shaking hands with students at a school function. This is the rush of attempting a name change that is appointed by the UH Board of Regents, which has stakeholders up in arms, and finally left two names that can possibly revamp the brand of this four-year university.

City University and Houston City University are the two names proposed by Stamats Inc., a national firm based in Iowa that focuses on Higher Education institutions, who gave a presentation on April 14th and 15th to the stakeholders of University of Houston-Downtown that brought both support and opposition. The presentation began with the history of the name change decision, which began when former UH-Downtown President Dr. Max Castillo was looking into strategic planning to ultimately “end confusion between UH and UHD”. The end to this confusion could lead to more donations from the public; thus, possibly creating funds for scholarships, programs, and even buildings. Even the number of students that are enrolled in UHD have been confused on whether the UHD ever was a satellite campus of the UH. According to the research that was compiled by Stamats, which also used research from former firm hired in 2008 Richards/Carlberg, 49 percent of prospective traditional students and 47 percent of prospective non-traditional students think that UHD is a branch campus of UH.

The opposition has not only been vocalized in these presentations, but also online. Students have taken to the university's official Facebook page to speak up. Bill Barton, an alumnus of UHD, wrote, “If they change it to something silly sounding like City College, they'll have to drop tuition by at least 50%. It sounds like a two year tech school name.” Current students echo the same various sentiments on Dr. Flores’ Facebook, which he uses to have more access with students. There are some who do like the name, but Dr. Flores has stated, “They are only going to make this change if we are united”.

Unlike the previous name change process in December 2008, there aren't any restrictions to the possible words that could be used to create the name. “Houston City University” was proposed by focus groups in 2008 and was shot down because of posed restrictions: similarity to existing name, similarity...

Gwen Ifill’s Lecture Series Talks Reveals Inside Details of a Moderator

By Wilbert Chinchilla
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

It's the Vice Presidential Debate of 2008 where Gwen Ifill was moderating both candidates Joe Biden and Sarah Palin, she asked Sarah Palin a question that wasn’t answered. She decided to let that one go because she didn't want to be perceived by the media as “catty”. For someone who never intended to be on television, Gwen Ifill still takes a stand for the high quality of journalism that has made allowed her show, “Washington Week” win a George Foster Peabody Award for coverage of the 2008 presidential election. She let esteemed guests at UH-Downtown a bit into her world of journalism in an entertaining and inspiring lecture series, “Why Journalism Matters?” which took place on Saturday, April 17th.

Touring across the country, Ifill made her way to UH-Downtown where she revealed her that she enjoyed the portrayal of her by Queen Latifah and how they are now “best friends”. Another inside detail that she revealed was that the day of the Vice Presidential debates of 2008, she slipped on Sarah Palin’s Biography while prepping for her job as the moderator. That slip made her break her ankle and she swears by it that it was Sarah Palin’s book.

Something else that has come from her show and her work in political journalism is her latest work “The Breakthrough.” The Dateline has a brief moment of questions with Gwen Ifill:

DL: Are there any Rumblings already of the 2012 elections, and if so, how are you preparing?
GI: “There are always rumblings just because we can’t get enough about presidential politics in this country, but I don’t know what is going to happen. I think it really depends on what happens with health care and whether it really takes form. I think it really depends what happens in the 2010 midterm elections and how many seats the democrats lose, pretty much everyone knows they are going to lose some seats. There are so many other things on the President’s agenda that it is too soon to say who is going to run against or whether he will be strong.”

DL: What is the role of college journalism?
GI: “College journalism is a launching pad for how we are going to do things from now on. When I got started in this business, I just wanted to work for a newspaper; I knew I wanted to be a journalist; I never looked any other way, I just wanted to be a newspaper journalist. And now, that’s not your only option anymore. In fact, you have think of more, you have to find different platforms, you have to be good on the air, on the radio, and on the web. I find that college students I meet now are perfecting ways to survive on all these different platforms --- that’s the only way to do it. What I want is that young people coming into journalism now understand that it is journalism and not just information. I want us to talk about news and not just whatever was on our home-screen. The rules haven’t changed about to tell news, how to

Too often lately, domestic politics becomes an exercise in uncivil personal actions and the declarations of personal prejudices. But that is just on the national stage; on the world stage the situation becomes wholly different. From April 8th through the 10th of this year, the University of Houston Downtown achieved a small experience on that larger scale with the simulation of the United Nations through HOUMUN (Houston International Model United Nations). What makes this event unique is that every delegate, there were several colleges and even a high school involved, represented a single country yet took part in a single action that influenced every

UHD Wants Student Coordinators for Welcome Week

By Salma Turrubiartes

Since the 2009 Welcome Week Student Coordinator term is coming to an end, the Department of Student Activities has been actively searching for two candidates to fill these positions for the May 2010-February 2011 term. Students were hired for these positions for the first time by the University of Houston-Downtown in Spring 2009, according to Michelle Falcon, Assistant Director of Student Activities and Events. Falcon added that hired students received a stipend each semester. They posted the position on the UHD web site and sent job postings to students through their UHD Gatormail accounts. They also held a meeting on Thursday, April 8, for those who wanted to learn more about this student coordinator position. Former Welcome Week Student Coordinators can reapply, Falcon mentioned.

Student coordinators play a vital role in helping the school prepare programs and activities to welcome new and returning students for the spring and fall semesters. Student Coordinators help with selecting give away items such as key chains, flash drives, pens, and drinks (non-alcoholic beverages like water and or sodas). They also assist with recruiting new volunteers, setting up tables, coordinating events and encouraging

The annual Fine Arts Festival that took place during the week of April 5th through the 9th opened to a stellar kickoff celebrating the many successes of that the College of Humanities and Social Sciences. Director of the O’Kane Gallery and Chair of the Fine Arts Festival Committee, Mark Cervenka stated that on Monday information was imparted about the department, new courses, and events of the week with background piano music played by student Scott Benton.

One of the new courses that brought an entire days of festivities on was the new Arabic Language courses that will now be offered at UHD. “The reaction to our Arabic language celebration event was really gratifying as much for our department’s efforts to bring Arabic language courses to UHD as it was to the attendees who sampled Arabic cuisine and listened to Arabic music” said Cervenka who also stated many attendees were pleased with a new language course “going beyond Spanish and French”.

Towards the latter part of the week, other events included Salsa Squared, a salsa tasting competition and dance exhibition. Novices and Experts were present to learn and dance to different types of styles of dance, including salsa, merengue, bachata, and cumbia. Attendees and even judges for the salsa tasting competition like Dr. Flores managed to get on the dance floor.

Throughout that entire week, “As You Like It” was playing at the O’Kane Theatre. The finalizing event of the week included a student art show that promoted the artwork of the various students at UHD who were competing for a cash prize.

Other faculty members who helped with festival events were Professor Floyd Newsum from Art, Dr. Deloris Wanguri from Communication Studies, Dr. Tom Lyttle and Dr. Kate Roark from Drama. Along with support from Dean Ahern and the College of Humanities and Social Sciences and to The Cultural Enrichment Center, this week brought many forms of art and culture to UHD.

Mark Cervenka contributed to this report. Along with being the Director of the O’Kane Gallery, he is also an Associate Professor of Art at UHD.
O’Kane Theatre’s Spring Production of ‘As You Like It’

By Jaime Puente
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

This spring the O’Kane Theater produced a streamlined version of Shakespeare’s great pastoral play, As You Like It. Directed by Professor Kate Pogue with help from Dr. Thomas Lyttle, the play ran from April 2nd to 10th, and was well received by audience members. The size of the cast was typical of Shakespearean plays, but even more typical of the University of Houston-Downtown. Students, alumni, and the theatre’s artist-in-residence, David Rainey, brought the characters to life in a way that only the O’Kane Theatre could.

Professor Pogue shortened the play for increased clarity and time constraints, but her adaptation remained true to the great playwright’s masterpiece. The two-hour production opened with a period dance to show a playful mood and transport the audience back to the 16th century villa of Orlando and Oliver played by Emil Niz and Mike Schultz. Both Niz and Schultz are veterans of the O’Kane theatre, and showed their experience on stage in their character’s famous fight scene. The younger Oliver has kept his brother Orlando from benefiting from their family fortunes causing the two to despise each other. Their relationship is one of the many antagonisms Shakespeare writes into the play, and it is enacted forcefully by Niz and Schultz. Their female counterparts, Rosalind and Celia, played by Tasha Fasciani and Ashley Miller, matched the fury of the brothers with the playful beauty of the two lovestruck cousins. While the romance between Orlando and Celia and Oliver and Rosalind are central to the play’s theme, one of most enjoyable scenes was the wrestling scene between Charles and Oliver.

Under the charge of Duke Frederick, the large and overbearing Charles challenges Oliver to wrestling match. Charles, played by Ernesto Albaran, was an imposing figure on the small stage of the theatre, and the larger than life wrestling choreography could be felt even in the last rows of the audience. The wrestling scene was a great example of how much work

Julian Casablancas’ New Sound Sticks with House of Blues Crowd

By Wilbert Chinchilla
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

With a packed first level in the Foundation Room at the House of Blues on April 12th, Julian Casablancas had an enthusiastic crowd while performing songs from his newest solo album, “Phrazes for the Young”. The group of young and older girls screamed to the lead singer of “The Strokes” every set. The performance was made all the better with his skilled accompaniment of percussionists that made the beats sound better live.

Although the album has received much criticism for departures from the typical four-piece-band-sound of his past compositions, hearing “Phrazes for the Young” live brought the nonchalant-ness of the inspiration for the subject matter — Oscar Wilde’s Essay titled “Phrases and Philosophies for the Use of the Young”. Compared to the over-energetic performances from the opening band Funeral Party, who received jeers, Casablancas’ past seems to be what created the majority of the buzz for the album and the concert at the House of Blues in Houston.

The songs that definitely moved the crowd to move was the single off of his album “11th Dimension” which contains pop synthesizers that embodies an 80s tune. His encore song, “Out of the Blue”, is a play on the blues where a blues scale is played along with some more synthesized tones. One of the more experimental and underrated tracks, “River of Brakelights”, seemed to be a crowd pleaser. Casablancas stated that he attempted to stick with the inspiration by trying to see how classical music was composed and transfer that over to a pop sound in an interview with NME, an alternative music magazine based in the UK. Casablancas continues to prove his songwriting chops where his new but familiar sounds would appeal to the hipster crowd and fans of The Strokes.

ESE Is Reborn with New Bassist

By Frank Raia
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

ESE premiered their new bass player April 9. Thomas from the band Atrocity was announced as the successor to Uncle Knotch, who is temporarily stepping down for personal reasons.

News of Knotch’s decision shocked ESE’s world, but the moment Knotch hand-picked Thomas at his last show at the Hot Dog Shop the previous week, everything was once again right in the world.

Known for their intense and reckless antics onstage, ESE maintains an extremely down to earth personality. And as said in more than one song they do keep it cool with everybody they meet. Thomas from Atrocity is an extremely good bass player; he’s young and a kickass person. He fits the band perfectly.

Reckless antics such as calling out each other’s screw ups or just talking bad about them has become a part of the stage presence of the band. At any point of the show they pour beer on each other while playing, tell horribly silly childish jokes, dance around like idiots, kick or smash equipment or invite the entire crowd onstage to sing along with them during the closing song “Wuz up ESE.” And if you scream a random song title loud enough, they will play it. “We know over 10,000 cover songs,” the band mentions while playing.

Along with these antics, ESE always attacks every show with more intensity than any band out there. Every show, whether it’s in Houston, Denver, Anaheim, Austin, Las Vegas or Phoenix, ESE plays with intensity that sticks with audiences- often bringing sellout shows the next time they play in that city. With Knotch leaving, the intensity only goes up. Thomas brings a bit of youth back into the mix, and that is always welcome.

A new album is in the making as you read this article. Band members Carlos, Johnny, Knotch and Thomas plan to hit the studio to lay down the beginning of another great album by the end of April. They plan to do a few local Texas shows with Thomas. After doing more work in the studio, they plan to hit the road again for touring by the end of May.

You can check out all things ESE on Facebook via ESE the fan page and the group ESE – Pride of The Northside, and ESE on MySpace, the ESE Posse for weekly updates. You can buy ESE cds at bestbuy.com, amazon.com, zodiackillerrecords.com, and fye.com.

Next scheduled show is May 8, 2010 at 8 PM at the Hot Dog Shop in Houston.
Assembly on the twin topics

human being. The only tools that were used were debate, research, diplomacy, and the conviction that one small group of people could affect billions.

The powers of personality and persuasion were evident at the conference as none other than the delegations of Cuba and Morocco took home the top honors for the General Assembly on the twin topics of human rights. For those of you which are unfamiliar with international politics, Cuba's track record on human rights leaves MUCH to be desired. But ideas are the currency at Model UN's and diplomacy is how it is traded.

This year, HOUMUN had a diverse staff behind its efforts which included two advisors from the Institute of Monterey Mexico which lent their experience in the General Assembly and general logistics. The executive director for the Model UN Eduardo Landaeta was in attendance, having graduated from UHD last semester and traveling from Florida. The conference began in an extraordinary manner with the President from our own school Dr. William Flores delivering some very inspirational words followed by our keynote speaker the Executive Director of the United Nations Association-Houston Chapter, Ms. Emily Ponte sharing with the audience a global perception of the tasks at hand. The closing ceremonies were just as moving with the speeches by the Dean of UHD's dean of the college of Humanities and Social Sciences, Dr. Susan K. Ahern, associate professor of Political Science Dr. Peter Li, and associate professor of English Dr. Merrilee Cunningham. Dr. Cunningham spoke not only upon the importance of the conference but drew a somber close by providing insight on the catastrophe that had just occurred in the government of Poland while the simulation was in session. The correlation she described was that the leadership and action demonstrated at the Model were the same that were needed in such "black swan" high-impact rare events that change the course of human history.

The ultimate goal of this or any Model UN is to leave the delegates with a feeling of empowerment and the experience that the salvation of humanity begins with an idea. That idea is only as powerful as the support that is lent to it, and only through open discussion can there be understanding.

From the HOUMUN team, we extend our gratitude to every delegate at the closing ceremony and wish that everyone walked away with the feeling that they made the world that much better for having spent their time and effort considering global problems.

went into the production of the play. Actors, crew and directors worked for two months to hone their performances. As You Like It's lasting presence—the songs, the monologues, and the drama between country and city—found life again in the O'Kane theatre. Joshua Jackson, a star of the fall semester's Aint Misbehavin', led the singers on stage in two great songs of the play, "Under the Greenwood Tree" and "The Forester's Song". Professor Pogue made sure to include the greatest parts of the play when creating the adaptation and that includes the monologue by the so-called melancholy Jacques.

By far one of the most memorable scenes and monologues in the history of English literature, the speech by the character Jacques was definitely one of the most memorable in this production. UHD's own David Rainey, acting professor and member of the Alley Theatre Group, proved his mastery of stage and verse in his rendition of "All the world's a stage." Professor Rainey was able to grace the production with his expertise through a generous grant from the College of Humanities and Social Sciences, and his performance did not disappoint. Commanding the stage, using the spotlight, and capturing the audience's attention, were just some of the lessons Professor Rainey taught his fellow actors and students through his monologue. One of the other great moments in the play came at the end from the character Touchstone, played by Carlo Magana. Carlo's performance and monologue at the end of the play really showed how much effort each and every person put into their performance. His monologue was not only entertaining and very funny, but physically difficult as well because he did it while juggling. A classic representation of the Shakespearean fool, it summed up the play nicely, but of course no Shakespeare comedy ends without at least one wedding.

The play was another great production by Dr. Lyttle, Professor Pogue and Rainey, and all of the student cast and crew. Judging from the sold-out shows, the Spring 2010 production of As You Like It was a huge success. Like every great theatre company, there is always a new play in the works. The Glass Menagerie is being performed this summer as a part of a new class and project that has been organized by Professor Rainey. It will be in production this summer, and all interested students should contact him for more information.

U.S. CENSUS 2010 ON CAMPUS

Paint a new portrait of America.

Required by the United States Constitution once every 10 years, the census is a snapshot of everyone residing in the U.S. regardless of age, race or citizenship. Data from the U.S. Census helps determine how more than $400 billion dollars of federal funding each year is spent on infrastructure and services such as college tuition grant and loan programs. Census information also determines the allocation of seats for each state in the U.S. House of Representatives and representation in local and state governments.

Complete and return your census form. For more information, visit www.uh.edu/cpp/census.htm.
